OREGON PINE NAMED IN 1820.
Dr. John McLaughlin So Described
First Oregon-China Cargo.

What is commonly known in this section as fir lumber is known abroad as Oregon pine or Douglas fir, and in many of the foreign countries, who are consumers of Pacific coast lumber, it is commonly quoted as "Oregon." The name Douglas fir was given by the federal forestry department, and the designation "Oregon pine" came into existence through the originality of Dr. John McLaughlin, who first located at Fort Astoria in 1812, as a representative of the Hudsons Bay Company, and in 1825 established Fort Vancouver, near where he established the first sawmill on the Pacific coast. This sawmill had a capacity of about one thousand feet of lumber per day. Soon after the mill was established it was decided to ship a small cargo of lumber to China, and in casting about for a name for the wood it was decided to call it Oregon pine.
